Question: 1

A social worker wants to understand how a patient's situation is shaped by the systems around him rather than by his individual characteristics alone. Which framework describes this approach?

A. Continuing bonds
B. Person-in-environment
C. Motivational interviewing
D. Stages of adjustment

Answer: B

Question: 2

A family from a tradition unfamiliar to the social worker expresses grief loudly and physically at the bedside after a death. Unit staff are uncomfortable and one asks whether the family should be calmed. How should the social worker respond?

A. Ask the family to moderate their expression out of consideration for other patients nearby
B. Move the family to a private room so their expression does not disturb the unit
C. Assess whether the intensity indicates a risk of a complicated bereavement course
D. Support the family's expression and help staff understand it

Answer: D

Question: 3

A family asks whether their 4-year-old should see his grandfather's body at the funeral home. They are divided and ask the social worker to decide for them. How should the social worker respond?

A. Suggest they weigh what is known about children and viewing, and support their own decision
B. Advise against it, since a child of four cannot understand what he is seeing
C. Ask the child what he wants to do and follow his answer
D. Advise that he should see the body, prepare him beforehand, and stay with him, since excluded children often regret it

Question: 4

A 6-year-old boy's father has died. His mother asks the social worker what she should say when he asks where his father is. What guidance is appropriate?

A. Tell him his father has gone to sleep, which is gentler for a child of this age
B. Answer only what he asks and avoid raising the subject, so he can grieve at his own pace
C. Use the words died and dead, and be prepared for him to ask again
D. Tell him his father has gone away on a long journey and will not be coming back

Answer: C

Question: 5

A patient who has been settled at home for months becomes withdrawn and stops engaging with the social worker. Nothing has changed in his symptoms. His wife mentions in passing that their grandson moved in three weeks ago. What should the social worker consider?

A. That depression has developed and a mood assessment should be arranged
B. That a change in the household composition may have altered the family system
C. That the therapeutic relationship has broken down and a change of worker should be offered
D. That his withdrawal reflects disease progression and should be reported to the clinical team

Answer: B

Question: 6

A bereaved husband tells the social worker at a follow-up visit that he has been drinking heavily since the death, has lost weight, and has thought about taking the tablets his wife left behind. He has no plan and asks her not to make a fuss. What should she do?

A. Refer him to a bereavement group where he can talk with others who have been widowed
B. Continue bereavement support and review the drinking at the next visit
C. Honor his request not to make a fuss, since he has described no plan
D. Assess the risk directly and arrange clinical assessment, having told him what cannot stay confidential

Answer: D

In a family meeting, one daughter states firmly that her mother must be moved to a nursing home. Her brother insists their mother stays at home. Both are visibly angry and repeating themselves. What should the social worker do?

A. Suggest the meeting is adjourned until both are calmer and able to discuss it
B. Summarize both positions and ask the family to vote on a course of action
C. Ask each of them what they most fear, because two fixed positions usually rest on compatible interests
D. Refocus the meeting on the medical facts, treating the disagreement as a misunderstanding

Answer: C

Question: 8

A family asks whether stopping their father's dialysis differs ethically from never having started it. A team member says stopping feels much harder. What is the position?

A. Withdrawing requires ethics committee review before it may proceed
B. Withdrawing and withholding a treatment are ethically equivalent
C. Withdrawing is permissible only where a written advance directive covers it
D. Withdrawing is more serious, since an action is taken rather than omitted

Answer: B

Question: 9

A patient with advanced illness has limited savings, no long-term care insurance, and will shortly need care beyond what her family can provide at home. What should the social worker do?

A. Explain that hospice will cover her care needs as her condition progresses
B. Ask the family whether relatives could contribute to the cost of care
C. Advise the family to begin looking at facilities within their price range
D. Assess eligibility for public programs and begin any application while there is time

Answer: D

Question: 10

A patient's wife will be caring for him at home. The social worker has arranged equipment, aide hours and a hospice contact number, and the family says they feel prepared. Which question best tests whether the plan will actually hold?

A. What happens if he cannot get to the bathroom at two in the morning and she cannot lift him
B. Whether they have understood the information they have been given about his condition
C. Whether the family knows which number to call and when the line is staffed
D. Whether all the equipment has been delivered and installed correctly in the home
